And NAPOLEON said, "There are no ALPS" Then he marched his army right over them as if they were not there. That's the spirit that creates large bank balances. Some people say they just have to spend all their money to live. Others say there are no difficulties big enough to keep a good man down and then they "march over them" to the receiving window.

DATES BACK TO STONE AGE

English Industry, Still Carried On,

Estimated to Be Nine Thousand Years Old.

While science and invention have ported out of the old and time-honed industries in the country, one still finds which not only date back centuries, but succeed in holding their own against the modern tools, remarks London Tit-Bits.

Perhaps the oldest and yet lasting surviving industry is carried on in Branson in East Anglia. Long ago the dwellers in the Stone Age Neolithic ages discovered that the ground in this district was full of bones, which they proceeded to unearth and fashion into polished tools and weapons.

That was at least 8,000 years ago, and today the industry still flourishes. It is believed that the Branson flint-workers are the direct descendants of those oldtime workers, and their work they use curiously shaped iron picks, closely resembling the bones, which, as a matter of fact, were the tools used by the Stone Age workers.

The flint is found in large blocks, which are left to dry and then broken into pieces six inches square, which, in turn, are shaped with hammers and then trimmed. Few flint-workers live to be old men, for the hardness of the material that are used to enter the lungs and bring on consumption.

PROOF OF GENOA'S ANTIQUITY

Italian City Was a Place of Importance in the Fifth Century

Before Christ.

An inscription in the cathedral of Lawrence contains the traditional account of Genoa's antiquity, and mentions the king of Italy, and the legend of the Giants, adding that Genoa was "great-grandson of Noah," and that he founded the city "in the time of Noah." As a matter of fact, Genoa is derived not from "Noah," but from the Latin "genus" ("kind"), owing to the shape of the coast, but its antiquity was conclusively proved in 1883 by the discovery of ancient remains of the Fifth century before Christ, which, if not used by the contemporaries of Abraham, were at least the same age as the Persian war and the early republic in Rome. The first mention of the city, however, is in the Roman history of its destruction by Magus, the Carthaginian general, during the second Punic war, and is confirmed by the Roman geographer Strabo, who mentions the place in 117 B. C. Ptolemy also mentioned Genoa as a port of call for the voyage from Gaul to Spain, as it still is.

Polished Shoes Once Decried.

Polished shoes were for a long time looked upon as a sure sign of effeminacy in men, and were often even called "London Anthers."

Therefore, "look me over, from my fat cat up into my shining shoes," seems almost proverbial.

Some ornamentation of any kind

Her Mixup in

Men

By FRANK H. WILLIAMS.

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Ernie Crane knew at once that the girl had made a mistake when she beckoned to him and made him sit beside her in her high-backed, brand-new roadster. He was positive she had made a mistake because he had never seen her before and because, she seemed to think she knew who he was.

And, also, he knew she had made a mistake because she started at once calling him George.

But Ernie didn't care much whether the girl had made a mistake or not.

She was tremendously pretty and attractive, the day was soft and balmy —a freak day in winter time—and he was just in the mood for an adventure.

"It's really important—awfully," the girl told him. "I have to have help and—"

"I looked helpful?" suggested Ernie.

"Thank you," she said, glancing at him with big blue eyes that were shaded by long, silky lashes.

Ernie felt his heart thrill at this. It had been a long time, a long time since he had been so thrilled by a girl.

"You ought to tell me your name and—what is it you want me to do," declared Ernie, as they swept through the city upon a macadam pile.

"My name? Grace Jennings. You've heard of me?"

"How could I help it?" cried Ernie.

though he'd never heard of her in his life.

"I knew you would have heard of me," Grace went on. "As you say, you could hardly have helped it. And the thing I want you to do, oh—looked at him with sudden, honest distress—

"I wish I weren't in this at all!"

Ernie looked at her sympathetically.

"It is as bad as that?" he queried.

The girl nodded vigorously.

"Now that I've met you and seen you, it's so very much harder," she confessed in a harassed tone of voice.

Whereas Ernie wondered immensely.

How in the world could the fact that she had met him make things harder for her?

"I'm sorry," said Ernie soliloquy.

"Perhaps things would be easier for you if you were to drop me here and let me stop some other motorist and get him to take me back."

A perfect panic of fear swept over Grace's face at this.

"No," she cried. "That wouldn't do at all. No, I've got to go through with it now that I'm in it. But I wish I weren't in it. I really do, George.

Ernie remembered that about me, won't you, after it's all over?"

Ernie gazed at her in intense surprise. Why was she so sorrowful and pathetic about it? And what was she saying to him, anyhow? The stars were growing deeper all the time.

"I'll remember that you are charming and pretty and adorable, no matter what happens," cried Ernie, with an air of earnestness.

"If I only met you beforehand it would have been so different. Then I'd never have been in this mess,

George."

Occasionally the Small People Have

Exceedingly Comprehensive Ideas

About Things Mundane.

"What a splendid big boy!" said a lady visitor, addressing the small son of a distinguished novelist, when she glanced at him with a glancing eye.

"And you can spell out what it says under the pictures, can't you, dear?

Why, it won't be long before you'll know the stories your papa writes as much as your own."

The little fellow regarded her gravely. "The stories your papa writes aren't meant to enjoy," he explained. "That's the stories he tells. The stories he writes are just to pay the butcher and the grocer."
